The Election Moral Observations on the

We have the gratification to announce that the labor of election is over, and the country is as well as could be expected. The result is gratifying to all parties, unless it may be to our Bell-Everett friends, and we doubt not that even they will in the course of a few days find some consolation in the consciousness of mere existence. To begin with the richest official placer—the county officers -the Democrats have gained from the Reublicans the Sheriff, and Auditor, and have elected their candidate for Probate Judge. The Republicans have gained the Clerk Commissioner, and have elected their Prosecuting Attorney, Surveyor, Coroner and Director of Infirmary.

It is something of a falling off for the Republicans, but considering that it is the first time they have traveled on their own muscle, without the aid of fusion, it is pretty well. The spoils of victory will, of course, be transferred to the conquerors, leaving much "ear victis." The "dead Sheriff's advertisements," which have maintained the party independence of the Commercial, and the Auditor's printing, which has contributed to the final perseverance of the Gozette, will now be transferred to the support of true Democratic principles, and those papers will be relieved from what has created an ancient and fish-like smell in the party, which even the odor of the barrels of coal-oil which have been burned in inceuse on the altar of our country could not

For Representative, Mr. Pendleton is reelected in the First District, and Mr. Gurley in the Second. Having signified our assent to this consummation heretofore, there is nothing more to be said. The county has two good Representatives; let us be thankful for such mercies!

The Republican State Ticket is undoubtedirelected. Unless our Bell-Everett friends have done better in other parts of the State than here, where they made most impression on the ear, they have not exhibited a balance of power sufficient to enable them to prevent the Douglas Electoral Ticket from kicking the beam, if they should have ever so large a place on it. On the vote for Judge of the Supreme Court, which we supposed would bring out their full strength, they added but about 3,000 to the Democratic can-

At this writing the probability is that the representation in Congress from this State will stand about as before, but the dispatches which will go out with this may show some

From other States come tidings pregnant with ponderous events. Pennsylvania and Indiana bave given Republican majorities, which are regarded as insuring them for Lincoln. These are the great strategic points in the Presidential campaign. With these safe for the Republicans, a vast change in the Government looms up in the future. Already we may imagine the President, as the telegraph rings his death-rattle, cramming his dirty linen into his portmanteaus. and preparing to evacuate the premises. From that the imagination stretches toward the vast horde of Government officials, more terrible than the Grand Army of the Russian Campaign, and more terribly routed, flying in consternation all over our country, and from every land on which the sun shines; and dying official shricks, like England's reveille, coursing with the sun and circling the earth with one continuous strain of official wails. The wildest imagination can not compass the picture. No wonder that dissolution seems a light remedy.

Pennsylvania is the great strategic point of the political quadrangle, from an amiable weakness which she has of yielding to a consideration when presented in proper form. With any moderate majority, Pennsylvania is vulnerable, by the requisite appliances. In 1856, Pennsylvania saved the Union by turning back the Republican host, although the means by which it was done caused severe pangs in the venerable Mr. Buchanan, which he relieved by his pathetic Duquesne letter. With only a moderate majority, she is regarded as pregnable to the usual munitions; but a majority of twenty or twenty-five thousand, such as the Republicans now talk of, is quite beyond the amount that any prudent man would like to risk. And, as for Indiana, when those Hoosiers take the bit between their teeth, there is no use in trying to stop them. They will play out their flurry.

The New York Saturday Press. This is a paper which sets at defiance all the established ideas of journalism. We have exhausted praise in that sentence. The Saturday Press refuses to bow down to respectable vices. It has no veneration for the clock of hypocrisy; and it shahes cant without mercy. Its mercy seems to be reserved for the sins of those who are without the gale which makes vice respectable—in short, for those who need mercy, which is contrary to all respectable usages. Nor does the Saturday Press admit the insuities which make up the literary papers, so called; which are made safe for families and for all latitudes by the absence of positive qualities. It is a literary paper, devoted to living topics, and is that thing which is much talked of but of which the idea is most vague-an independent paper.

Religious Tests.

The Democrats had a picture of a fat porker at the head of their ticket, being, it is claimed, an allegorical injunction that the duty of a Democrat was to go the whole figure, without scratching. But the Hebrews in some of the wards took it as an attempt to cram down their throats an animal forbidden by their religion, and many of them refused to touch the unclean thing, and voted the Republican ticket, merely to defend their falth. It strikes us that the ticket was a violation of the Constitution of the United States, which forbids the imposition of any religious tests.

THE ORDINANCE to remit the per-capita miscarried in the Council last evening, overborns by the unparliamentary conduct of its enemies, aided by a sudden paroxysm of timidity, or worse, on the part of Mr. Han-nan, hitherto supposed to be its friend. It is perha, as well as it is—the new contract, although not as burdensome, being quite as indefensible in point of principle as the old. The thing will take a little more time, but it will be better done by-and-by.
